Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: ...of Sekhenrenrup-maat Antufaa was attacked, but yet unlooted. The monument of Ra-Sekhem-shedet-tai Sebek-enrsauf had been forced from the tomb of Nebamen, and the bodies of the king and Nubkhaas the queen were looted. The monuments of Raseqenen Taaa, Raseqenen Ta-aa-aa, Rauaz-kheper Kames, Aahmes Sipaar, and Neb-kheper-ra Mentuhotep, were all intact. Only one of ten was violated; and two tombs of queens were intact and two violated. But all of the private tombs of the chanters were looted (Abbott). On the 19th the tombs of the royal families were to be examined. A man who had been arrested as being near the tombs, when a search was made in the year XIV., confessed to looting the tomb of Aset, wife of Ramessu III.; but the tomb proved intact (Abbott). The same day the man who had looted the tomb of Nubkhaas was examined, and described the looting, and the division of the things in eight parts between the thieves; also how they set fire to the mummies after looting them (Amherst). The evening of the same day three men were condemned for giving false witness. On the 20th Hathor the chief of police complained that he overheard the governor of the town joking with the men, and boasting that he had five informations which would bring them all into trouble; yet he never reported any of them, and was evidently hushing up the case. On the 21st the witnesses were brought up about this matter. But the Nomarch states that he had found the reports of robbery to be false, and therefore the governor had been falsely stating that he had evidence, in order to blackmail the people. Here the Abbott papyrus ends. It reads exactly like a case in Egypt to-day, where the one object is bakhshish; and if there were no evil-doers to give bribes to be let off, fals...
